“ I had the pleasure of meeting Paul when he responded to an ad I ran in our local paper for my pet portraits. He called me the day the ad ran and commissioned me to do a colored pencil portrait of three dogs. He liked it so much that he reached out to me again with pictures of three other dogs he'd owned, and I did a second portrait for him just a couple of months ago. He clearly had such a love for animals, and spoke at length about all of the dogs I portrayed for him, both past and present, as if they were his children. He also spoke of his wife, whom he had lost to cancer recently. He was, I guess you could say, a little "rough around the edges", but was always a gentleman and so very kind to me, even in the short time I knew him. My condolences to his family and friends. Paul was a good man and I'm glad I met him.

Uncle Paul was a character. He had strong opinions and was not afraid to speak his mind. He loved music and war trivia, always recommending bands to me and trying to teach me WW II facts, my brain refused to retain. He loved his dogs and couldn't help but take in those who needed him. When he loved, he loved fiercely. I am so lucky to have felt that love! I know he is with his soul mate, Juanita, on the other side. And I'm sure all of his dogs ran to greet him! Love and miss you always, Paul. May you be at peace.
